ANTALYA ATATÜRK HOUSE MUSEUM

TRACES OF THE GREAT LEADER

Mustafa Kemal Atatürk, one of the greatest leaders in history and founder of the Republic of Türkiye, often made nationwide trips to listen to people's concerns and conduct on-site investigations and interviews.

The houses where he stayed during these trips have been turned into museums where Atatürk's memories and belongings are displayed.

The Antalya Atatürk Museum is one such house where Atatürk stayed during his visits to Antalya in 1930 and 1935 and continues to honour the memory of the prominent leader.

Mustafa Kemal Atatürk visited Antalya for the first time on March 6, 1930; he stayed in this house until March 12, during which time he met with farmers and citrus growers and visited historical sites.

The Aspendos Theater was repaired, opened to visitors, and began to host festivals because of Atatürk's instructions during this visit. During his visit on February 18, 1935, he again stayed in the house assigned to him.

The house, which belonged to the Governorate in those years and was later used by schools and public institutions, was demolished in 1984, but was rebuilt to honour Atatürk's memory and was opened to visitors in 1986 as Atatürk Museum.

On the first floor of the museum, which is a two-story building, you can see the news and photos of Atatürk's visit to Antalya and watch a documentary about Atatürk and Antalya.

On the second floor of the museum, there is a room where Atatürk's belongings are exhibited and a section where the coins that have been minted since the foundation of the Republic can be seen.

The museum is open every day and can be visited for free.
